Sanctions orders - potentially ruinous.
Have represented attorneys in 2 $1.3 million sanctions cases and 1 $150,000 sanctions case.
Handling sanctions matters is potentially dangerous in three important ways.

3

Determine if sanctions are requested the attorney, the client, or both. Why? “[T]he sanction should be visited upon the offender,” so that the trial court must attempt to determine whether the discovery failure is attributable to counsel, or to the party, or both. TransAmerican Natural Gas Corp. v. Powell, 811 S.W.2d 913, 917 (Tex. 1991). A party should not be punished for its counsel’s conduct “unless the party is implicated apart from having entrusted its legal representation to counsel.” Glass v. Glass, 826 S.W.2d 683, 687 (Tex. App.–Texarkana 1992, writ denied).

4

Substantial monetary sanctions sought against both lawyer and client for failing to timely produce requested, highly relevant documents.

Lawyer did not produce because even though requested from client, the client withheld them until the sanctions motion was filed.

5

TDRPC 1.06(b)(2):

[A] lawyer shall not represent a person if the representation of that person. . . become[s] adversely limited by the lawyer's or law firm's own interests.

However....
